1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 Defendants do not dispute a single material fact necessary to decide whether their 3 policy and practice of forcing detainees to sleep on the floor is unconstitutional. Not one.
4 They do not dispute that Tucson Sector hold rooms do not have beds; they do not dispute 5 that the majority of detainees are detained for longer than 12 hours; and they do not 6 dispute that detainees are forced to sleep on the floor, or on mats on the floor. (See Defs.’ 7 Controverting Statement of Facts at 1-2.) On these facts the law is clear: detainees in 8 Border Patrol custody must be provided with “a mattress and bed or bunk.” (Thompson v.
9 City of Los Angeles, 885 F.2d 1439, 1448 (9th Cir. 1989) (emphasis added); see also P.I.
10 Order, ECF No. 244 at 12:14-21). Defendants have cited no case holding otherwise.

11 Instead, Defendants rely on Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979). But Bell is of 12 limited relevance here, as it applies to pretrial criminal detainees, not civil detainees such 13 as Plaintiffs. The appropriate test for civil detainees was articulated in Jones v. Blanas: 14 Civil detainees, protected by the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause, are entitled to 15 “more considerate treatment” than pretrial criminal detainees, who are in turn entitled to 16 better treatment than convicted prisoners. 393 F.3d 918, 932 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting 17 Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 321-22 (1982)). Bell establishes that the bare 18 minimum requirement for pretrial criminal detained individuals is to be free from 19 punishment. The Constitution demands more for civil detainees.

20 The Ninth Circuit in this case did not, as Defendants allege, decide that Bell 21 “provides the standard by which any condition of confinement is evaluated.” (Opp’n at 22 10.) Rather, the Ninth Circuit rejected Defendants’ own argument on appeal that this 23 Court had misread and misapplied Bell. Doe v. Kelly, 878 F.3d 710, 720 (9th Cir. 2017).
24 The Ninth Circuit also held that the provision of mats alone as an interim measure was 25 reasonable; it did not hold that mats alone was constitutionally sufficient ongoing relief.
26 Id. at 721-22.

27 Even if Bell were the proper standard to apply, Bell does not, as Defendants allege, 28 permit any condition of confinement so long as the government has made a “good faith

1 effort” to comply with the Constitution. (Opp’n at 2, 11.) Rather, the government may 2 not punish civil detainees under any circumstance. See Bell, 441 U.S. at 535 (“a detainee 3 may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of 4 law”) (citation omitted). The government’s “good faith effort to provide conditions that 5 are not punitive or arbitrary” is immaterial if the result constitutes punishment. (Opp’n at 6 11.) Defendants’ manufactured “good faith effort” test infects and undermines the entirety 7 of their opposition.

8 And even when the Bell test is correctly articulated and applied, Defendants’ 9 argument fails. First, in Bell there was no dispute that pretrial criminal detainees were 10 entitled to beds; the only question was whether they were entitled to their own cells. 441 11 U.S. at 541–43. Second, Defendants have not identified a cognizable reason why 12 detainees in Border Patrol custody cannot be given beds. Bell holds that an otherwise-13 excessive deprivation can be justified if the government provides evidence that the 14 deprivation serves a legitimate objective, like “maintaining institutional security and 15 preserving internal order.” Id. at 538, 546. But Defendants have not identified a 16 legitimate objective. Nor have they articulated—let alone proffered evidence showing—17 how the lack of beds is reasonably related to any such objective.

18 Finally, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs’ motion rests on the “erroneous premise” 19 that there is a constitutional right to sleep. (Opp’n at 2, 9.) But as this Court made clear, 20 this premise is not “erroneous” at all: “The Court finds that the law and the facts clearly 21 favor Plaintiffs’ position that Defendants are violating Plaintiffs’ constitutional right to 22 sleep.” (PI Order, ECF No. 244 at 15:28-16:1 (emphases added).) Other courts agree: 23 “[S]leep is critical to human existence, and conditions that prevent sleep have been held to 24 violate the Eighth Amendment.” Walker v. Schult, 717 F.3d 119, 126 (2d Cir. 2013) 25 (citations omitted); accord Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 720 (5th Cir. 1999) (“sleep 26 undoubtedly counts as one of life’s basic needs”).

27 Plaintiffs’ motion should be granted.
28

1 II. ARGUMENT

2 A. Defendants Have Not Disputed A Single Material Fact.

3 Where the moving party has carried “its burden of production, the nonmoving 4 party must produce evidence to support its claim or defense.” Nissan Fire & Marine Ins.
5 Co. v. Fritz Cos., Inc., 210 F.3d 1099, 1103 (9th Cir. 2000) (citation omitted). And where 6 “the nonmoving party fails to produce enough evidence to create a genuine issue of 7 material fact, the moving party wins the motion for summary judgment.” Id. (citing 8 Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986)). Defendants have not disputed a 9 single material fact necessary to decide the issue before the Court: detainees—the 10 majority of which are detained for longer than 12 hours—are forced to sleep on the floor.¹ 11 (See Defs.’ Controverting Statement of Facts at 1-2.) In light of Defendants’ failure to 12 demonstrate how a lack of beds is rationally related to a legitimate non-punitive 13 governmental purpose, infra at II.C.3-4, Plaintiffs should prevail on this ground alone.

14 B. Thompson Establishes That Beds Are Required Under These 15 Conditions.

16 Thompson expressly held that mattresses and beds or bunks are constitutionally 17 required under these conditions. Thompson, 885 F.2d at 1448 (adhering to precedent 18 holding “that a jail’s failure to provide detainees with a mattress and bed or bunk runs 19 afoul of the commands of the Fourteenth Amendment”). Defendants’ only rebuttal to 20 Thompson is that it involves jails, and “does not purport to address Border Patrol stations 21 or other custodial facilities.” (Opp’n at 13.)²

24 ¹ Following the issuance of the preliminary injunction, detainees now receive mats 25 that they must place on the floor. This was not the case before the preliminary injunction.
(Defs.’ Controverting Statement of Facts at 2 (conceding fact 3).)

26 ² Bell, on which Defendants rely heavily, was about New York’s Metropolitan 27 Correctional Center—a jail that, like the Los Angeles County Jail in Thompson, is used to 28 house pretrial detainees and convicts alike. Bell, 441 U.S. at 524. Defendants cannot base their opposition on Bell, while at the same time arguing that other decisions about jails do not apply to Border Patrol stations.

1 Defendants' attempt to invent a "Border Patrol" exception to this constitutional 2 requirement is unavailing. Thompson did not hinge on the nature of the detention facility; 3 instead, it found that what matters are the conditions of confinement. For that reason, in a 4 case involving police station holding cells, the Third Circuit reached the same conclusion 5 as the Ninth, holding that "the 'unsanitary and humiliating' practice of forcing detainees 6 to sleep on mattresses on the floor does not pass constitutional muster." Anela v. City of 7 Wildwood, 790 F.2d 1063, 1069 (3d Cir. 1986). Significantly, Chief Allen testified at the 8 preliminary injunction hearing that, "We're a processing center. We would be the same as 9 the Tucson police station intake." (Declaration of Samuel Christopher Cortina in Support 10 of Reply in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Regarding 11 Defendants' Obligation to Provide Beds ("Cortina Reply Decl."), Ex. 1, PI Hr'g Tr., 12 Nov. 15, 2016, ECF No. 250 at 107:14-15.) Defendants' attempt to distinguish Thompson 13 and related authority through a contrived "Border Patrol" exception fails because the 14 conditions of confinement in those cases parallels the conditions present here.

15 C. Defendants Misread And Misapply Bell.

16 1. Bell sets the floor, but civil detainees are constitutionally entitled 17 to more.

18 The Ninth Circuit in this case did not, as Defendants allege, hold that Bell 19 "provides the standard by which any condition of confinement is evaluated." (Opp'n at 20 10 (emphases added).) The Ninth Circuit merely affirmed that this Court, on a motion for 21 preliminary injunction, did not misread or misapply Bell. Doe, 878 F.3d at 720. Nowhere 22 did it say that that "the Bell standard applies to Border Patrol stations in this very 23 litigation." (Opp'n at 1 (emphasis in original)).

24 Nor could it. For Bell establishes that pretrial criminal detainees may not be 25 subjected to punitive conditions of confinement. 441 U.S. at 535. Bell does not supply 26 the governing standard for civil detention. That standard is articulated in Jones v. Blanas.

27 As Jones explains, "civil detainees retain greater liberty protections than 28 individuals detained under criminal process." 393 F.3d at 932 (citing Youngberg, 457

1 U.S. at 321-22). They are therefore entitled to protections “at least as great as those 2 afforded to an individual accused but not convicted of a crime.” Jones, 393 F.3d at 932 3 (emphasis added). Subjecting a civil detainee to “punishment” within the meaning of Bell
4 surely violates due process. But Bell does not describe the limits of civil detainees’ 5 constitutional rights. Civil detainees are entitled to more than just the absence of 6 treatment that amounts to punishment—they are entitled to conditions of confinement that 7 “bear some reasonable relation to the purpose for which [they] are committed.” Id. at 933 8 (internal quotation marks omitted).

9 2. Bell does not establish a “good-faith effort” test.

10 Defendants manufacture a “good faith effort” test that bears no resemblance to the 11 test articulated in Bell. Defendants’ reliance on this fictitious test permeates their 12 opposition: as long as Border Patrol “makes a good faith effort to facilitate an individual’s 13 ability to sleep” or “a good faith effort to provide conditions that are not punitive or 14 arbitrary,” Border Patrol has satisfied its constitutional obligation, or so Defendants argue.
15 (Opp’n at 2, 11, passim.) On Defendants’ theory, as long as Border Patrol tries to provide 16 constitutionally sufficient conditions, the actual conditions don’t matter. But that’s not 17 what Bell holds.

18 Bell holds that “a detainee may not be punished prior to adjudication of guilt in 19 accordance with due process of law.” 441 U.S. at 535. It holds that “punishment” can 20 consist of actions taken with “an expressed intent to punish.” Id. at 538-39. And it holds 21 that even absent expressed intent, a pretrial criminal detainee can demonstrate that 22 conditions are punitive by showing that the government’s actions are not rationally related 23 to a legitimate non-punitive governmental purpose. Id. at 561. Nowhere does it hold that 24 the government may punish pretrial criminal—much less civil—detainees as long as it 25 makes a good faith effort not to.

26 The Constitution compels the government “to provide adequate food, shelter, 27 clothing, and medical care” to everyone it takes into custody. Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 28 U.S. 307, 324 (1982) (emphasis added). It does not qualify this duty with “good faith” or 1 “best efforts” modifiers. Where the government detains people against their will and 2 denies them the ability to care for themselves, the government must—not just endeavor 3 to—provide for their basic human needs. DeShaney v. Winnebago Cnty. Dep’t of Soc.

4 Servs., 498 U.S. 189, 199-200 (1989).

5 3. Defendants fail Bell’s standard, properly read and applied.

6 Defendants fail to satisfy the test set forth in Bell because they do not come 7 forward with at least “some evidence that their policies are based on legitimate . . .
8 justifications.” Swift v. Lewis, 901 F.2d 730, 732 (9th Cir. 1990) (citation omitted).
9 Instead, Defendants offer a single, bare excuse: That “Border Patrol stations are unique” 10 and “materially distinguishable from jails, prisons, or other types of confinement 11 facilities.” (Opp’n at 1.)

12 Defendants’ argument fails for two independently sufficient reasons: (1) Border 13 Patrol’s purportedly unique features bear no rational relationship to the provision of beds 14 and thus do not satisfy the Bell standard, accord Doe, 878 F.3d at 721 (rejecting 15 Defendants’ argument that they need not provide mats to detainees because Defendants 16 offered “little to no evidence that providing detainees with mats interferes with the Border 17 Patrol’s identification and processing of individuals.”); and (2) they do not demonstrate a 18 material distinction between Border Patrol’s conditions of confinement and those involved 19 in either Thompson or Anela.

20 First, Defendants have articulated no reason why the fact that Border Patrol agents 21 “apprehend aliens at all times of day and night at locations covering most of the southern 22 region of Arizona” precludes Border Patrol from offering beds. (Opp’n at 2-3, 7-8.) As 23 Anela makes clear, police officers also apprehend and detain at night, yet nothing 24 precludes police stations from providing beds; and, in fact, the Constitution demands that 25 they do. Anela, 790 F.2d at 1064 (“The arrest occurred at about 11:15 P.M. on July 3, 26 1981, and the plaintiffs were detained in holding cells in the police station until their 27 hearing at 11:00 the next morning.”).

1 Second, even accepting that Border Patrol “has no control over the number of 2 individuals it apprehends” and “typically does not know the identity of an individual 3 before apprehension,” this has no bearing whatsoever on whether Border Patrol can 4 provide beds—and Defendants fail to articulate one. (Opp’n at 3-4, 7-8.) Indeed, the very 5 same is true of jails. E.g., Florence v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 326, 336 6 (2012) (describing the population variations that may occur in pretrial detention centers, 7 and noting that “[j]ails can be even more dangerous than prisons because officials there 8 know so little about the people they admit at the outset”).

9 Third, the length of detention at Border Patrol stations is not unique and does not 10 justify harsh conditions of confinement. See Anela, 790 F.2d at 1064-65 (bed required for 11 12-hour detention); Thompson, 885 F.2d at 1448 (bed required for two-night detention); 12 Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981) (bed required regardless of length of 13 detention); see also City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 381(1989) (considering 14 medical treatment claim of individual held in jail for “about an hour”).

15 Fourth, to the extent that Defendants are offering the excuse that the stations were 16 not designed to serve as the detention centers they have become and that it would cost 17 money to enable them to serve that function, that excuse is not cognizable under the law.³ 18 See Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 539 (2011) (government cannot justify the 19 unconstitutionally overcrowded conditions of its prisons by asserting that they were 20 originally designed to hold fewer people); see also PI Order, ECF No. 244 at 27:20-21 21 (“Defendants cannot sidestep reality by relying on the structural limitations of the Border 22 Patrol detention facilities, i.e., that they are not designed for sleeping.”).

23 Despite this Court’s previous ruling that “a deprivation of constitutional rights 24 cannot be justified by fiscal necessity,” (PI Order, ECF No. 244 at 5:27-28), Defendants 25 cite an Eleventh Circuit decision for the proposition that cost is a legitimate governmental

26 ³ Defendants’ discussion of the “remoteness” of the facilities may also be intended 27 to go to the cost of providing beds, but it is unclear because Defendants fail to explain 28 why this “fact” matters. (Opp’n at 8.)

1 interest here. (Opp’n at 11 (citing Hamm v. DeKalb Cnty., 774 F.2d 1567, 1573 (11th Cir.
2 1985)).) Their citation is misplaced. In Hamm, the Eleventh Circuit was considering a 3 challenge to a criminal pretrial detainee’s treatment under the Eighth Amendment. It does 4 not set the standard here. Defendants, moreover, fail to cite Hamm’s admonition that 5 “[the objective of limiting costs] will justify neither the complete denial of those 6 necessities nor the provision of those necessities below some minimally adequate level.”
7 Hamm, 774 F.2d at 1573.

8 Defendants also cite Hamm for the proposition that a court should afford the 9 government deference regarding its “balancing of costs and benefits” of a condition of 10 confinement. (Opp’n at 11.) But the deference Defendants rely upon is limited to policies 11 implemented to effectuate “internal order and discipline and to maintain institutional 12 security.” Bell, 441 U.S. at 521. Defendants have offered neither justification for their 13 practice of forcing detainees to sleep on the floor. No deference is warranted.⁴

14 The purported “uniqueness” of Border Patrol stations—itself speculative and 15 unsupported by evidence—is not a cognizable justification for forcing class members to 16 suffer the constitutional deprivation of going without beds. Even if Defendants had 17 proffered evidence of Border Patrol’s uniqueness, the law is clear that “[u]nconstitutional 18 conditions cannot be tolerated because constitutional requirements are difficult for the 19 state to fulfill.” Lareau, 651 F.2d at 110 n.14.

20 4. None of the additional “facts” proffered by defendants are 21 material.

22 Defendants’ statement of facts, a document in which Defendants are required to 23 present all “additional facts that establish a genuine issue of material fact or otherwise

26 ⁴ Defendants cite Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 584-85 (1984) for the same 27 deference argument, but Block is inapposite because (1) it dealt with criminal pretrial 28 detainees and (2) it afforded deference related to security policies, neither of which is present here.

1 preclude judgment in favor of the moving party,” Civil Local Rule 56.1(b), fails to 2 introduce a single fact that is material to deciding the legal question before the Court:

3 Alleged Additional Facts 1 and 2: Whether Border Patrol intends to operate a 4 detention center or not—the focus of Defendants’ first two alleged facts—does not factor 5 into whether Class Members are constitutionally entitled to sleep. See Doe, 878 F.3d at 6 721 (affirming this Court’s ruling that Class Members are entitled to lie down and rest 7 after twelve hours of detention in Border Patrol facilities).⁵ Indeed, the uncontroverted 8 evidence demonstrates that Border Patrol detains individuals for (1) nearly the same 9 amount of time despite fluctuations in apprehensions, and (2) lengths of time comparable 10 to jails. (Cortina Opening Decl. Ex. 7 (Bandemer Suppl. Report) at Chart 3 (e3DM data 11 demonstrates that detainees were detained on average for twenty-seven hours prior to the 12 preliminary injunction and for twenty-four hours following the preliminary injunction).)

13 Alleged Additional Fact 3: Defendants’ discussion of the design of their facilities 14 goes solely to the cost that would be required to add beds to them, which does not 15 implicate a legitimate governmental interest. (PI Order, ECF No. 244 at 5:27-6:2 (“the 16 government may be compelled to expand the pool of resources to remedy a constitutional 17 violation.”))

18 Alleged Additional Fact 4: Defendants’ purported attempt to place detainees in 19 facilities with beds is, like their “good faith efforts” argument, not dispositive and easily 20 abused. Without a mandate, there is no guarantee Border Patrol will, in fact, do so. (See 21

23 ⁵ Defendants argued before the Ninth Circuit that the lengths of detention at the 24 time of the preliminary injunction were caused solely by a surge in apprehensions in 2015.
25 The Ninth Circuit accepted Defendants’ representation when denying Plaintiffs’ request 26 for provision of beds. Doe, 878 F.3d at 721-22 (the preliminary injunction “provides 27 Plaintiffs with actual relief without imposing a huge cost on Defendants to alleviate what 28 might be a temporary need. Evidence as to whether the need was likely to continue would certainly be relevant to the district court’s determination of Plaintiffs’ request for a permanent injunction.”). Plaintiffs have now demonstrated that the conditions are not, as Defendants argued, temporarily related to a one-of-a-kind surge, but are permanent in nature, thus necessitating a permanent and appropriate solution.

1 Cortina Opening Decl. Ex. 14 at USA-000631 (TEDS policy uses permissive rather than 2 mandatory language when describing this policy).)⁶

3 Alleged Additional Facts 5 and 7: These alleged facts speak solely to what 4 actions Defendants took following the preliminary injunction (and, indeed, represent a 5 concession that Defendants did not immediately comply with this Court’s order).
6 Defendants fail to explain how, if at all, these alleged facts bear on the question of 7 whether Defendants’ practice of forcing detainees to sleep on the floor is or is not a 8 violation of those detainees’ constitutional rights.

9 Alleged Additional Fact 6: Defendants offer this fact in an effort to distinguish 10 their facilities from correctional facilities. This effort fails for three reasons: (1) the ACA 11 standards are not limited to correctional facilities;⁷ (2) Class Members are entitled to 12 greater protections than the criminally convicted, Jones, 393 F.3d at 931; and (3) Plaintiffs 13 have offered controlling authority holding that detainees kept in similar conditions to 14 Class Members are entitled to sleep on beds raised off the ground, see Thompson, 885 15 F.2d at 1448.

16 ***

17 Defendants do not dispute a single material fact necessary to decide the question of 18 whether Class Members are entitled to beds. Instead, Defendants rely on attorney 19 argument and a misinterpretation of Bell. They point to their “unique” mission, but fail to 20 explain how that mission is served by forcing detainees to lie on the ground to sleep.

21
22 ⁶ It is significant that the Santa Cruz County Jail—which holds individuals charged 23 with crimes—has better accommodations (e.g., beds) than the Border Patrol detention 24 facilities. (Cortina Reply Decl. Ex. 1, PI Hr’g Tr., Nov. 15, 2016, ECF No. 250 at 117:21-25 119:6 (Judge Bury asking witness to identify every amenity provided to detainees held at the Santa Cruz facilities but not the Tucson detention centers and following with: “Don’t you think it’s time that your facilities are modified or changed to accommodate the human need at least for sleep if you are going to keep somebody for two or three days?”).

26 ⁷ The ACA standards, according to the ACA, were crafted for facilities that “hold 27 under confinement pretrial or presentenced adults or juveniles who are being held pending 28 a hearing for unlawful activity.” (Opp’n Ex. E, Eligibility Criteria, xvi.) This definition includes Defendants’ facilities.

1 They also point to cost, but that is not a legitimate governmental interest. Even under 2 Bell—a case that does not set the minimum standard of treatment for pretrial civil 3 detainees—this policy does not pass muster. None of the authorities or material facts 4 offered by Plaintiffs were controverted by Defendants. These civil pretrial detainees—a 5 majority of which were detained longer than twelve hours (although the average length of 6 detention across the Class Period was twenty-six hours)—should not be relegated to 7 sleeping on the floor of Defendants’ detention facilities.

8 III. CONCLUSION

9 For the aforementioned reasons, Plaintiffs’ motion should be granted.
